

Timothy Besley is Professor of Economics and Political Science at the LSE where he is also Director of the Suntory Toyota International Centres for Economics and Related Disciplines (STICERD). He is a Research Fellow at the Institute for Fiscal Studies, the Centre for Economic Policy Research (CEPR) and a member of the Institutions, Organizations and Growth program of the Canadian Institute for Advanced Research. He is currently serving a three year term as President of the Bureau for Research and Economic Analysis of Development of which he is also a founding Board member. He was educated at Oxford University where he became a Prize Fellow of All Souls College. He subsequently taught at Princeton University before being appointed as Professor at the LSE in 1995. His professional honours including being a Fellow of the British Academy, a Fellow of the Econometric Society, and a Fellow of the European Economics Association. He is the 2005 winner of the Yrjö Jahnsson Award presented every other year to a young economist who has made a contribution in theoretical and applied research that is significant to economics in Europe. Professor Besley's research focuses mainly on issues in Development Economics, Public Economics and Political Economy. He has published widely on a variety of topics, mainly with a policy focus. He has served as a Co-Editor of the American Economic Review and a Managing Editor of the Economic Journal as well as serving on the editorial board of numerous other professional journals. He is an elected member of the Council of the Royal Economic Society, the Econometric Society, and the European Economics Association. In recent years, he has worked as a consultant to the World Bank and HM Treasury. He is married with two children and lives in Barnes, south west London.