

R. Bruce Hitchner is Professor of Classics and International Relations and Director of the Peace and Justice Studies at Tufts University (USA). He has directed archaeological projects in Tunisia and France. His publications have focused on the history and archaeology of the Roman provinces and economy. He is currently writing a book for Oxford University Press on Roman Globalization and its legacy. Hitchner is also Chairman of the Dayton Peace Accords Project. He was a member of the negotiating team which produced the April 2006 Package of Constitutional Reforms in Bosnia, an initiative funded by the European Commission, Sweden, Denmark, Norway, Switzerland, the Carnegie Corporation of New York, Tufts University, and the United States Institute of Peace. He has published op-eds on Bosnia and Southeast Europe in the International Herald Tribune, The Wall Street Journal, European Voice, The Baltimore Sun, The Dayton Daily News, Providence Journal, and other print media. Hitchner is the co-author with Marshall Harris, Michael Scharf, and Paul Williams of Making Justice Work: The Report of the Century Foundation / Twentieth Century Fund Task Force on Apprehending Indicated War Criminals. (Brookings Institution Press, 1999).