

Richard Hornbeck is a Visiting Assistant Professor at SIEPR (2011-2012) and an Assistant Professor in the Economics Department at Harvard University. His research and teaching focuses on economic history and development. Research topics include adjustment to environmental change; property rights and agricultural development; agglomeration spillovers in manufacturing; barriers to urban development; and impacts of transportation improvements on economic growth. Richard received his PhD in economics from MIT in 2009, and a BA in economics from the University of Chicago in 2004.