

Ling Zhang is an assistant professor in Chinese history in the Department of History at Boston College and presently a post-doctoral fellow in the Program of Agrarian Studies at Yale University. Dr. Zhang graduated from Cambridge University; she taught at University of Newcastle, and was a Ziff Environmental Fellow in the Center for the Environment at Harvard University. Her research focuses on the economic history of medieval China and the environmental history of water. Dr. Zhang is finishing a manuscript entitled The River, the Plain, and the State: an Environmental History of North China, 1048-1128, and is now working on another book project, "China's Sorrow or the Yellow River's Sorrow? An Environmental History of the Yellow River."