FIGURE 29-1. Growing U.S. Openness
Like all major market economies, the United States has increasingly opened its borders to foreign trade over the last half-century. The result is a growing share of output and consumption involved in international trade. Since the 1980s, imports far outdistanced exports, causing the United States to become the world’s largest debtor nation. (Source: U.S. Department of Commerce.)